ANNEX I TERMS OF REFERENCE FOR INDIVIDUAL CONTRACT

POST TITLE: National Consultant – Supporting Public Procurement Reform Efforts in Thailand

AGENCY/PROJECT NAME: Advancing Anti-corruption Efforts in Thailand – A Multi-disciplinary Approach (Project ID: 00078586; Output ID: 00088759)

COUNTRY OF ASSIGNMENT: Bangkok, Thailand

1) PROJECT DESCRIPTION

The extensive volume of business transactions that take place, involving private and public sector bodies, potentially offers great opportunities for irregularities and private gains. International statistics indicate that public procurement may represent more than 10-20% of GDP (variations normally depend on the size of the public budget and the nature/size of the public sector) and, maybe, as much as 30% of the national budget is allocated for the acquisition of goods, services and works. It is absolutely vital to the credibility and efficiency of a public procurement system that it is free from corrupt and fraudulent practices.

Mitigating corruption risks in procurement is a key pre-condition for promoting open economy in Thailand and providing an environment that is conducive to investment. UNDP has been a pioneer in developing methodologies for integrity risk assessment in several sectors, including health, water and education. In 2014, UNDP conducted an integrity risk assessment in public procurement in Thailand building on internationally recognised methodologies. Accordingly four key important risk areas were identified: i) bid collusion and bribery (kickbacks), ii) conflict of interest, iii) discretion, and iv) political interference.

To enhance openness and integrity in public procurement, Thailand also needs i) a coherent, sound and modern public procurement law covering all public sector entities as well as other supporting legal infrastructure, and ii) a public procurement agency or similar body to oversee the implementation of rules, policies and practices for procurement to which the new law applies, and iii) support the professionalization and career development strategy of the procurement function, management and staff, including strengthening the credibility of the procurement profession.

Currently, Thailand is not in the possession of a coherent public procurement law, but a regulatory system based on government regulations. With such a regulatory approach there are risks of fragmentation instead of coherence, weak enforceability and coverage, lack of legal certainty for the bidders, insufficient protection for procurement staff, and opportunities for unjustified exemptions and discretion.

In this context, the Royal Thai Government is in the process of drafting a new Public Procurement Law (PPL). Unlike the current Prime Minister's Office Regulations on public procurement, the PPL will cover all public entities, including central government agencies, local governments, state-owned enterprises, independent organisations and other types of public institutions. The PPL will not in itself set out all the rules and regulations that may be necessary for its effective implementation, and that other supporting legal infrastructure, appropriate institutions, and capacity-building tools will also be needed to form a coherent procurement system. In this regard, the project aims to provide the best international technical expertise in this field to ensure that the designs of secondary legislation, institutional setup, and capacity development strategy will lead to effective implementation of PPL and successful public procurement reforms. The project will take a systematic approach to support the reform efforts at the legislative, policy, and operational levels to fulfil the goals of “value for money” in public procurement with integrity.
