Project title:	Environmental Governance for Sustainable Natural Resource Management in the Mining Sector of Mongolia
Title of the assignment:	Development of practical guidelines for Participatory Environmental Monitoring through pilot monitoring exercises in selected mining sites
Type of contract:	Institutional (national)
Contract duration	8 months (April – Nov 2020)

A. BACKGROUND

The Sustainable Development Goals (SDGs) spearheaded by the United Nations and the global community reinforce the rationale behind the Participatory Environmental Monitoring (PEM) to reduce the negative effects of mining operations. They pose challenges that can be tackled by the participants at a local level in order to move towards global goals.

At the international level the PEM is an emerging mechanism for meaningful engagement of the local stakeholders in decision making processes of mining sector. In many countries, this mechanism is effectively experienced to address environmental conflicts arisen from mining operations. The PEM maybe a solution for more effective environmental protection and for building trust among parties involved.

In Mongolia, local communities are negatively affected by mining activities and environmental degradation due to mining persists. There is a lack of meaningful participation, collaboration and mutual responsibility of stakeholders, including state, business, civil society and local communities, in broader process of decision-making. There are provisions in laws and regulations which require public participation in decision-making, however, there are barriers to meaningful participation, including lack of awareness, lack of actual channels of participation, or complaints handling. There are cases in Mongolia where different types of participation and cooperation have been conducted by civil society organizations (CSOs) and mining companies. However, there is a need to link and coordinate them with PEM approaches, developing effective models of communications, mutual trust and understanding between civil society organizations, companies, state actors and affected local communities.

In this context, UNDP Mongolia seeks a national CSO or NGO to conduct PEM exercises in targeted mining sites to produce practical tools/methods on PEM to be used by the local stakeholders to monitor the mining activities in their regions.
