I. BACKGROUND

The UNODC Global Maritime Crime Programme (GMCP) supports member states to respond to maritime crime challenges. As part of this work, the GMCP provides expert legal and academic advice through events including capacity building events and printed documentation related to the specialist area of maritime crime and maritime law.

One of Indonesia's greatest challenges and priorities is ensuring that its vast maritime domain is safe, secure from crime threats and viable to ensure economic activity. With a variety of on-water interdicting agencies, investigation becomes complex especially when there is a lack of coordination. The prosecution of maritime crime in Indonesia is another challenge. The diversity of maritime law enforcement entities possess arrest powers deriving from different laws and which are applicable to different offences and in different jurisdictions.

This makes the prosecution of maritime criminal cases for prosecutors more complex. While Indonesia benefits from prosecutorial development cooperation from bilateral partners, there is a need to improve maritime crime-specific prosecutorial skills. Indonesia needs a leading group of prosecutors and judges who are proficient in maritime law and the nuances of maritime criminal law to ensure the on-water interdictions lead to sound legal dispositions.

While significant work is ongoing to support the development of the criminal justice system, prosecution and advocacy skills, there is room to build supplementary specialised knowledge around maritime law and maritime crime. Through opportunities for joint activities with maritime law enforcement actors, procedures and collaboration can also be improved to ensure that perpetrators of maritime crime does not avoid legal sanctions because of deficient investigation and prosecution. These legal outcomes can also be compromised from a lack of coordination between these entities.

In June 2019, the UNODC GMCP published a second edition of the manual, "Maritime Crime: A Manual for Criminal Justice Practitioners". It outlines legal regimes and practical considerations related to maritime jurisdictions, maritime law enforcement powers, various maritime crimes (piracy, drugs trafficking, smuggling of migrants, terrorism at sea) and operational tasks such as evidence collection at sea. The manual will be translated into Bahasa Indonesia and will be used as a training for Indonesia's judges, prosecutors and legal advisors.

Furthermore, mock trials are an effective way to practically learn and test laws and procedures and identify and find solutions to potential challenges to case outcomes. Mock trials will include courtroom advocacy (e.g., initial arguments, production of evidence, witness cross examination, suspect examination) and dispositions. The mock trials will be designed to test Indonesia's judicial procedures and legal frameworks for the prosecution of maritime crime cases involving a variety of complex legal issues.
