BACKGROUND & PROJECT DESCRIPTION

Insert text here.

UNDP had cooperated with the Ministry of Health (MOH) to support innovation and experimentation for developing and piloting a “doctor for everyone” or “Bac si cho moi nha” digital health service to improve healthcare services quality and access in remote areas and for ethnic minorities and people with disabilities. To support the GoV strategy for digital transformation of the health sector, based on initial success in supporting pilot activities on digital health services, and responding to the request of MOH partners, UNDP has been supporting development of a nationwide digital health service connecting the general public, commune health stations and higher-level healthcare facilities.

The COVID-19 pandemic has also highlighted the need for digital transformation of health to reduce disease transmission risk, to maintain and strengthen essential health services, to utilize effective technologies and to strengthen health administration and management of personnel, patient data, procurement processes, equipment and essential supplies and other processes through digitalization and improved data management. The project will scale up and extend key results of the previous JSB-funded project to support the urgent ongoing national response to the prolonged and unpredictable health impacts of the pandemic and to contribute to longer-term health systems strengthening and digital transformation. The project will support the expansion of the grassroots telemedicine solution to five new provinces and will support the development of the telemedicine policy and legal framework, contributing to universal access and quality of healthcare services at the grassroots level is enhanced and health services can be maintained during periods of disease outbreaks and social distancing measures with reduced transmission of disease.

There is also a critical need to ensure global equitable access to COVID-19 vaccines for containing the pandemic and it is predicted that COVID-19 vaccination will need to be maintained as a long-term global effort due to the risk posed by new variants and the uncertain duration of immune response. The Government of Viet Nam has made a strong representation to WHO as well as to international vaccine companies for technology transfer to supply domestic needs as well as countries in the region and has approved a new National Science and Technology Programme to Promote Research and Production of Vaccines for Human Use in Viet Nam. The Ministry of Health has requested UNDP's support for documenting and sharing international models and experiences on developing national production of vaccines and medicine, organizing seminars on vaccine policies and promotion of domestic production, support to formulate policies and laws, and other related areas.

The project will support urgent initial steps towards strengthened vaccine access and licensing of vaccines during the COVID-19 pandemic and beyond, addressing the need for increased vaccine access in Viet Nam and the wider region, and contributes to addressing existing constraints faced by Vietnamese Government agencies, institutes and enterprises in relation to domestic R&D, clinical trials and certification of vaccines for use face considerable challenges. Through documentation and sharing of international models and experiences, support to undertaking studies and organizing seminars on vaccines and developing the capacity of officials and experts on the WHO technology transfer model for mRNA vaccines, the project will support Viet Nam to identify the critical steps to be undertaken and to build the required capacities necessary to support Viet Nam's long-term plan to produce vaccines for domestic use and to potentially become a regional hub for vaccine supplies. Through a series of meetings and technical support, the project will support Viet Nam to engage more strategically in regional discussions and to identify its comparative advantage and feasible strategies to contribute to strengthening equitable access to vaccines, diagnostics and therapeutics in the Asia-Pacific Region.

The project will also support the next steps on raising awareness and promoting adoption of new national PPE standards that were developed through the previous JSB project, based on international standards, enabling healthcare workers and the public to protect themselves from Covid-19 and providing a market incentive for domestic manufacturers to produce products that comply with these standards in future. This will draw on UNDP's regional approach to digital transformation of health, including the approach to national assessment of digital health ecosystems and digital health building blocks as applied in some other countries in the region, and sharing of good examples of digital health solutions.

Activities of this project are under below two areas but not limited to this list:

Grassroot Telehealth: Health systems strengthening for digital transformation of commodity procurement and management and telemedicine for universal health access

Vaccine Production: Strengthened vaccine access and capacity for certification of COVID-19 vaccines in Viet Nam
