1. BACKGROUND

UNDP is implementing a five-year GEF funded project “Adapting to climate change induced coastal risk management in Sierra Leone” with the aim to strengthening the ability of coastal communities to systemically manage climate change risks and impacts on their physical infrastructure and economic livelihoods.

The coastal zone of Sierra Leone is highly vulnerable to the increased frequency and severity of coastal erosion, flooding and storm surges which severely impact social wellbeing (health), livelihood security (and water resources) and major economic sectors such as fishing, tourism, water resources and agriculture. Coastal communities are already experiencing considerable repercussions of these impacts, notably on their livelihoods with reduced fishing productivity, ecosystem degradation and low farming outputs. The limited accessibility of climate-related data limits the ability of decision-makers to make informed planning and policy decisions for the coast (in particular marine and sea parameters databases such as wave height, wave period, wind speed and direction), and to take any clear strategic actions to remedy these negative effects. This lack of adequate knowledge is contributing towards undermining social and economic development, particularly under a changing climate. In addition, weak institutional regulatory capacity coupled with the absence of a national “coastal specific” community-based information system that focuses on supporting the management of climate-related risks continue to hamper long-term coastal planning, management and early warning activities. The GEF-funded project is designed to address these problems. The intended outcome of the project is to help the Government of Sierra Leone (GoSL) to become more climate resilient while contributing towards achieving Sustainable Development Goals (SDGs).

The project focuses on three thematic components;

Component 1: Generating sound scientific knowledge and access to information;

Component 2: Climate information internalized into coastal development policy and plans;

Component 3: Awareness and alternative, innovative activities to support adaptation in the coastal zone. Through these components, the project will work towards the removal of those policies and any informational barriers that are preventing Sierra Leone, as a nation, to systematically manage coastal risks. This will contribute to the vulnerability reduction of both coastal communities and ecosystems and strengthen institutional capacity and adaptation planning.

UNDP is about to construct innovative fish processing infrastructural facilities to reduce post-harvest losses in the five project locations indicated above. The impact of such infrastructural work if not carefully assessed may result to unintended negative consequences on the environment. Therefore, UNDP is recruiting an individual consultant to undertake an Environmental Health and Social Impact Assessment (EHSIA) at the various project sites to provide an understanding of any negative environmental impacts on the infrastructural work and social effects with proffered mitigations measures. The successful candidate is expected to conduct this assessment by strictly following Environment Protection Agency guidelines on EIA.
